Maggie Cline, the "Irish Queen," began her second week's engagement at the Terrace Garden last night, and she was most cordially received. She was the "star of the evening, beautiful star," and she undoubtedly knew it. Miss Cline, however, puts on no "frilis," and is as bilssfully democratic in her methods as during the old days at Tony Pastor's. Other artists were: Hines and Remington, in "Our Pawnshop;" the Crescendo brothers, musical clowns; Tom Flynn, in Irish songs; the Austins, in living pictures; Ed Parker, and George Girard. The promenade concert, by Nahan Franko's orchestra, was very enjoyable.

IMPERIAL MUSIC HALL.

The vaudeville performance at the Imperial Music Hall last night was entirely up-to-date. Lester and Allen, the funny men, were seen at their best, and Nellie Seymour, the little singer, did some very good work. Mile Ottille was there with her chansonettes and Hadi Cheriff executed some clever dagger feats. Other features were Zara, the Honolulu dancer from the Midway Plaisance, who has made something of a sensation at this house; Coffey and Kell, Fiske and Quigg, and Fish and Vinton. The living pictures were, of course, seen. The attendance was large. IMPERIAL MUSIC HALL.
